Marini SkinSolutions opts for North America-made packaging

The US brand selects Quadpack's Regula Airless Refill, as well as premium bottles and tubes for its rebranded skincare range – all made, tested and decorated in North America

Marini SkinSolutions is committed to making solutions that are effective, sustainable and ecologically responsible. The California-based company founded by Jan Marini has been revamped with new branding – and its award-winning Skin Care Systems have been given a makeover, courtesy of Quadpack. Over 50 products are now beautifully packaged in airless packs, tubes and jars made of fully-recyclable and partially-recycled materials, with local production a priority.

A former model turned skincare guru, Jan Marini is one of the most respected names in the professional beauty industry, pioneering the use of glycolic acid in skincare. The rebranding of her company Jan Marini Skin Research (JMSR) was the perfect opportunity to overhaul its packaging. Reviewing the options with Quadpack, it selected the premium thick-walled PET solution Regula Airless Refill for its aesthetic and technical properties. Made in the US, it keeps the formula safe from external contaminants, while offering precise dosing and a high restitution rate.

In addition, Quadpack provided a variety of thick-walled PET bottles and tubes, made and decorated in North America, and assembled in Dallas, Texas. Marini SkinSolutions states: – We take pride in producing our solutions in the USA. From formulations developed at our headquarters to packaging primarily sourced within the United States, we strive to keep our supply chain as local as possible. –

Quadpack was involved at all stages of the project, including extensive testing of over 40 formulations at its Dallas laboratory, with Head of Quality Tarik Benanni in constant contact with the brand's chemist, to ensure perfect compatibility. All references were decorated with the new brand image for a sophisticated and coherent look and feel.

The rebrand went live in the summer of 2025, with products sold globally through spas and
